PORTFOLIO COMPOSITION

OUTLOOK

As of late June 2025, the outlook for a Philippine-based dollar money market fund is primarily tied to the actions of the US Federal Reserve (the "Fed") and the global market. The Fed's monetary policy is the main driver. While the Fed has been cautious about cutting rates due to lingering inflation and other uncertainties, market analysts are anticipating a cumulative 50-basis point reduction in the federal funds rate throughout 2025. This expectation of future rate cuts is a key factor in the performance of dollar-denominated securities.

This environment has been generally positive for dollar money market funds. Since these funds invest in short-term, low-risk US dollar securities, a stable or slowly declining rate environment can be beneficial. In fact, many Philippine-based dollar money market funds have already seen solid year-to-date returns, with some reaching nearly 4%. In short, the outlook for these funds is supportive, with the anticipation of gradual rate easing from the Fed providing a backdrop for continued positive, though modest, returns. These funds remain an attractive option for investors looking to protect their US dollar capital while earning a low-risk return.
